Unity through balance

1. Restitution of enrichment not justified by success must be clearly distinguished from acts of discriminatory redistribution and is an essential prerequisite for safeguarding the sacred and inviolable right to property.

2. A just state that is mindful of long-term capacity to act must ensure that the waste of tax money is punished just as severely as tax evasion.

3. The imposition of tax burdens is justified only while comprehensive civic representation in the formation of public opinion is safeguarded; the recognition of government debt securities must be made contingent upon the maintenance of these conditions.

4. The right of resistance against unjustified rule is exercised through the refusal of economic cooperation. In order to prevent the erosion of the productive forces and thus of the population's foundations of livelihood, a broadening of ownership participation in favour of employees should be pursued, so that resistance actions are prevented through predominant self-interest.

Contentment through balance

1. Entrepreneurs benefit from an economy freed from frictions, because this secures higher returns in the long term than a dilapidated structure: cooperation rules that prevent productivity erosion create a stable market environment in which doing business becomes worthwhile again.

2. If the misuse of tax money is sanctioned just as severely as evasion and the recognition of government debt securities remains linked to comprehensive civic representation, politicians and civil servants are automatically protected from the temptations of corruption and waste and remain capable of action, respected and credible as members of the public service.

3.Families gain price stability and sustainable livelihoods because the aforementioned principal distinctions protect property, punish waste and preserve the productive forces from erosion, thereby creating real purchasing power and long-term security.

4. Only protection against expropriation through fair data compensation preserves a qualified stratum of intellectual creators and prevents the emergence of a sickly "fools-with-tools" economy in which ever more, yet ultimately only unsaleable generic junk is produced.

Truthful balance

Freedom remains, debt bondage wanes!

Legitimate liabilities arise exclusively from bilaterally voluntary legal relationships based on mutual respect. State action can only justify legitimate debts under the precondition of genuine representation—whether the government truly represents the people or merely itself. The validity of this representation is not a question of appearances but a question of economic survival. Action based on factual power conveys no conviction of right and generates no genuine value-creating willingness to cooperate; consequently debts arise that create burdens but no values. If state debts exceed economic strength (without exorbitant taxation and expropriation measures), this indicates the lack of legitimacy of their assumption and thus their invalidity as malignant debts. They are to be written off as symbolic respect-money—in contrast to purchasing-power respect-for-respect money, which arises solely from contract and mutual appreciation. Particularly easily recognisable as malignant are state debts entered into under conditions of concentration of power or control of opinion.

Damages are meant to be repaired

Malignant state debts require determined correction in order to prevent humanitarian catastrophes. A quite generous regulatory proposal aims at reducing the government spending ratio to a sustainable 30 %, with 25 % of the target achieved through spending cuts and 75 % through the cancellation of illegitimate debts. Respect-money portions in state payments are thereby to be conceived as symbolic compensation carrying a claim to windfall profits that become significant in the event of unexpected technological gains in prosperity; the cancellations are to be carried out in such a way that existential emergencies need not be feared.

Damages are meant to be prevented

Disregard for the connection between economy and justice slowly destroys living conditions, cultures and populations—analogous to tolerating the trade in drugs or blood diamonds. Criminal framework laws are therefore urgently needed that punish the fencing of uncommissioned state debts just as strictly and determinedly.
